Feed me! is a performance where we question the difference between man and machine through dance and music.

We are in a space surrounded by musical apparatus that needs to be looked after and taken care of in order to function. The three caretakers have to show consideration, have technical knowledge, be patient and determined at the same time. As the caretakers work they notice that the apparatus do not act the way they want them to. They are facing difficulties together in which their relationship is being tested but when collaborating laughter and sweet music appears.
